Candidates see challenges ahead for new commissioner

Editor's note: This is the first of a two-part series on the four finalists for Montana's new commissioner of higher education. Interviews with Chambers "Gail" Norris and Robert Huff will appear tomorrow.

By Bill Miller
Kaimin Reporter

The future may bring many challenges to the Montana University System, and two candidates for the commissioner of higher education, Carrol Krause and Irving Dayton, have ideas about how such challenges should be dealt with.

The search committee for the commissioner post will meet

Friday morning in Helena and it is possible that one of the four candidates will be named as the new commissioner at the Montana Board of Regents meeting Friday afternoon.

Krause, a former provost to the University of South Dakota, said in a telephone interview yesterday that he foresees a substantial loss of federal financial aid, which will keep many students from going to school. He also predicts a 5 to 10 percent enrollment decline in Montana colleges.

Combating these problems, according to Krause, will require evaluation of programs and curriculums of Montana colleges, to see whether they can operate with less money and still provide quality service, and then adjust faculty and resources accordingly.

Cooperation with the regents on thorough analysis of budget cut impacts is another method Krause would use.

Krause did not cite any specific changes he would like to see in the Montana University System but did mention two that he thought were needed nationally. Counseling is one.

According to Krause, many students are reluctant to visit counselors for help and eventually drop out of school.

Krause said counseling should identify students' talents and then encourage students to develop them.

Krause said he would also like to see a strengthening of basic core classes for academic majors.

"There is a trend in higher education to offer courses non-essential to a major," Krause said. "There should be more focus on basic courses."

He added that graduating students should be assured that they will graduate from a strong, quality program.

Krause, who is now vice president for Prairie States Marketing Co. in Rapid City, S.D., said he would like to be commissioner because he misses higher education.

"This position is one I am qualified for and one I could excel at," he said. "The problems facing higher education are not the kind that can't be dealt with."

Irving Dayton, deputy commissioner of academic affairs for the Montana University System and Montana's acting commissioner of higher education, said Montana graduates do well in professional and technical schools out-of-state, but that he would like to see their qualifications for out-of-state employment improve.

"We shouldn't take a narrow view that they (graduates) are only going into a Montana job market," Dayton said.

To meet this challenge, Dayton said, he would push for financial support for quality in faculty and academic programs in Montana, which he said would put Montana graduates at the same level of sophistication as those of other states and make them more competitive.

"A degree from a Montana school shouldn't count against you, it should be a plus," Dayton said.

Funds will be the major obstacle to greater college quality because of financial responsibility put on the state by the Reagan administration, Dayton said.

"The next legislative session will be difficult," he said. "The federal safety net is leaky and there will be tremendous competition for the Legislature's attention and state money."

Dayton said a team effort is needed with the college presidents, the students, alumni and the commissioner to make the financial needs of the system known to the Legislature.

"The commissioner, no matter who he is, will never save higher education alone," Dayton said. "It will require a concerted effort. Everybody has to get involved."

Dayton, who taught physics at Montana State University, has been involved in higher education in Montana for 20 years.

"If I have any kind of a reputation or image in Montana, it's because of a concern for quality and an ability to help people achieve it," he said.

UM involved in $1.1 million campaign for new building

By Karen McGrath
Kaimin News Editor
and
Bill Miller
Kaimin Reporter

With $1.1 million as their goal, the University of Montana Foundation & Office of Development and the UM Alumni Association are striving for building funds for the new Fine Arts/Radio-Television Building.

In a press conference held in the University Center Gold Oak Room Saturday, UM President Neil Bucklew explained the "A Future for the Arts" campaign of the Foundation and Alumni boards. Each group will solicit funds for the building before construction begins on the tentative date of May 15.

William Zader, associate director of the UM Foundation, said advertisements soliciting funds will run over local radio and television stations soon. One advertisement will feature UM alumnus Carroll O'Connor.

The Foundation, a non-profit organization that raises and manages funds for UM, will inform potential donors throughout the state and country about the project. As a group, the Foundation also committed each of its members and their related businesses to contribute toward its $200,000 goal. The Alumni board, which raises funds from alumni for the university, plans to sell 500 seats in the new building's theater at $450 apiece to reach its $225,000 goal.

A total of about $400,000 has already been either received or pledged, Bucklew said. The Foundation has received pledges totaling $32,500. Of the 75 state and non-state corporation contacted $105,000 has been pledged. Individual donors have contributed or pledged $42,000.

Last year, the Montana Legislature authorized $7.5 million for the building's construction cost of $8.6 million, and challenged the university to raise the $1.1 million balance.

Construction of the building will take about two years, Zader said.

Four-course series on rivers to be offered Spring Quarter

By Gordon Gregory
Kaimin Reporter

A 13-credit program, "Rivers and Civilization," will be offered next quarter at the University of Montana, and students wishing to enroll in it should apply by March 15.

The four-course series, sponsored by the Wilderness Institute, will include studies in river ecology, recreation, conservation, philosophy and health care.

Coordinator of the program, Jay Vest, a graduate student in interdisciplinary studies, said the courses are diverse in form but unified in theme.

"The central emphasis of these courses is to objectively look at how we use and think of rivers and to explore what rivers really mean to us and to the rest of nature," he said.

Tom Birch, assistant professor of philosophy and one of the program's instructors, said the courses will be academically demanding.

"It's not going to be just fun and games, though I'm sure much of it will be fun," he said.

Vest said that while water is vital to man's survival, Americans abuse it, use it carelessly and do not understand the complex relationships between water systems and civilization and nature.

"Water is the lifeblood of the earth and rivers are the veins and arteries," he said. "We use our rivers as sewage ways and are destroying some permanently. The kinds of pollution we produce with our high-technology industries are going to be in our water systems for a very long time, some, like radioactive waste, virtually forever."

Birch said, "Americans have to a great extent forgotten the importance of water. Water is our next big environmental crisis."

The four courses in the program are Environmental Studies 195, "The Structure and Meaning of Rivers;" Forestry 477, "Recreational River Systems;" Humanities 351, "Rivers and First People, the Upper Missouri," and Social Work 489, "Wholistic Health Seminar."

Students enrolled in the series must take all four courses and will participate in activities that include a weekly health-care seminar and at least two field trips. One trip will be a four- or five-day float trip down the Missouri River.

Students can get more information at an orientation session tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Forestry 206.

Applications for enrollment are available at the Wilderness Institute.

Access roads OK'd in Gallatin Forest

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court yesterday cleared the way for the Burlington Northern Railroad Co. to build access roads inside the Gallatin National Forest in southwestern Montana.

The court, without comment, let stand a ruling that the railroad has a right under a 1980 federal law to build roads to reach its otherwise-inaccessible timber lands.

At issue was a section of the Alaska National Interest Lands

Conservation Act.

The section says federal officials must provide reasonable access to non-federal land within the boundaries of the National Forest System. The access is for reasonable use of the non-federal lands and is subject to restrictions aimed at minimizing the damage on nearby lands.

Last August, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the disputed section of the Selection processes must be organized

Publications Board was created by Central Board to choose the editors of the Montana Kaimin and Cutbank, a student-published literary magazine. The selection process by this independent body is as non-political as is possible. Pub Board acts autonomously; CB has little say in its decisions.

This system is clearly advantageous. It protects these editors from contending with petty politics quite apart from their duties, and it protects the positions from being treated as political plums awarded to CB puppets.

But the trust CB inherently must place in the board has been violated this year in the selection of the new Kaimin editor.

Feb. 9, the final deadline for taking applications for editor, arrived, and only one application had been returned.

Last year the board faced a similar situation when only two students applied for the position. Even when the board extended the deadline, no other applications were received.

Based on that experience, this year's board members decided not to extend the deadline. Yet their decision was negligent: none of the members called the present Kaimin editor or journalism school faculty to inquire whether more students were considering applying. Such an independent, uninformed decision was inexcusably arrogant. Who better would know whether more people were interested in the position than those who deal with the students directly and daily?

Board members perhaps unthinkingly transgressed their responsibility a second time.

Most businesses hold interviews of all their potential employees to judge whether the applicant is right for the job. The principle applies here as well. But the board overlooked this principle.

Because only one application had been received, board members decided not to conduct interviews. But an application can be deceiving. While not true in this case, it is possible that the qualities of an applicant could have been antithetical to those considered important for the position by the board members. If that were the case, the board could have voted to extend the deadline.

Also, and more importantly, students, who read the Kaimin, should be given the opportunity to participate in selecting their employee. After all, the Kaimin received $60,000 in student funds last year.

Finally, the meeting in which the new editor was chosen was barely advertised. No notice appeared in the Kaimin. Why neglect announcements in the newspaper for which the new editor would work?

Pub Board did not violate ASUM bylaws in its selection process, but it did violate the instinctive trust students and Central Board must place in the board.

Interview and selection procedures for ASUM-affiliated positions have been an anathema this year. Witness the charges directed against programming last spring and again in the selection of the ASUM accountant in December.

CB should consider constructing specific bylaws to govern interview and selection methods. A uniform outline at least would ensure students the right to participate in matters involving their money.

Support ASUM

Editor: On the day of the ASUM elections, we and several others spent numerous hours working for the election. We are disgusted with the childishness of these people who cheated and ruined these elections. These people deliberately ruined and made a mockery of the whole ASUM. For what purpose? For the purpose of ruining the reputation of the ASUM and those who are trying to organize and make it a decent student government. Are you proud of yourselves? Well one Brownie button for you. My Gosh, if we spent all our days ruining things and stabbing people in the back this whole world would be a shambles.

We personally and with others backing us, will be ashamed to say we are from the University of Montana if this pettiness continues. What does all of this prove, with Swagerty pulling pranks and Greg Anderson writing silly editorials? Our high school student council was more civilized than this. Isn't college supposed to be a time where we become adults and learn to behave in a decent manner.

No matter how much people ridicule the ASUM and cut down the whole organization it's not going to serve as anything except to make those who really care feel like hell. There is no way that these people who are running their mouths off about this issue, can say that the whole ASUM organization is a farce. There are people who genuinely care and if they make a mistake that's the way it goes, no one is perfect, not even you who seem to have nothing better to do but gripe to them. Instead of griping you should get off your butts and try to help, or just keep your mouth shut. ASUM is representing the University of Montana students, if we don't support them and give a damn instead of complaining about everything then you will and where will we be then?

Beaten to punch

Editor: RE: Tim Rogers' Feb. 19 letter

Tim, you beat me to the punch! From a music business point of view, you are absolutely right about Shawn Swagerty's Quarterflash/Loverboy review.

I'm glad to see the U of M students rejecting this kind of babbling, unknowledgeable "drivel," and I hope the editor of this publication is more careful as to what kinds of articles it allows to be printed.

RE-VOTE

Editor: Wednesday March 3 is the date for the new primary election for ASUM presidential and vice presidential candidates. That is correct, you have to RE-VOTE!

Out of all the activity paying students an estimated 17 percent of you turned out to vote in good faith. That is a good show compared to last year. The problem is that a handful of students decided they should vote in bad faith and cheat the system and vote more than once in order that they support their institution, help an ailing institution and combat an established institution. The result of their efforts was a destruction of your efforts.

Please RE-VOTE at the following locations: the Liberal Arts Building the University Center Mall and the Lodge. Remember to bring with you your ID card when you RE-VOTE and bring a friend because there were still 7,400 students who forgot to VOTE! Everyone together now — RE-VOTE, VOTE! RE-VOTE, VOTE!

Third Reich

Editor: Just a little note to let all you German history fans know the Third Reich is not dead; it is alive and well and living here in our own Knowles Hall. We have all of your favorite institutions: censorship of the press, propaganda machines and the like. We have even established gas chambers here on the fourth floor, our victims some six or seven cap-wearing cockroaches. Questioning of internal or external policy is strictly verboten. I think that has something to do with wartime dissent. All in all, we're just one happy family, and if you don't believe us, we'll kill you.

Fair's roommate

Editor: In response to Knowles Hall President Pete Carroll's letter (Feb. 24, 1982). The man has a point, but he should try living with Clark Fair. It is a real pain in the ass. Earlier in the year, a second-year junior in chemistry called my roommate insignificant, and you were insightful enough to call him a pissant (by the way, wasn't it Mr. Fair who defined the word for you?). Clark was much too scared to personally attack any one individual; I'm glad to see someone on my floor had guts enough to single out and ridicule an individual in the paper.

As dorm president, weekend janitor and CB candidate, your time must be heavily taxed. It is nice to see you have a secretary to type your letter. I find myself disgusted to realize that Mr. Fair has not the time to attend his dorm council meetings. After all, a real man like you faithfully attends these important functions.

It truly is a shame that Mr. Fair has to resort to stealing other people's ideas for letters. What will he stoop to next, bootlegging Springsteen records? Nobody knows!

Mr. Carroll, I could write forever about the evils of Clark Fair; but why don't you come down to the room; I've got some wonderful jokes about his family.

Lacks sense of subtlety

Editor: I was glad to see Charles Bickenheuser protest the lack of professionalism in Brian Rygg's Kaimin editorial of Feb. 19. It is unfortunate that the Kaimin's editorial staff, particularly Mr. Rygg, lacks any sense of subtlety and finesse; running a college newspaper, albeit on a liberal campus, is no excuse for using crass language and a consistently abrasive tone in editorial commentary and headlines. Doubly shameful is the news that Mr. Rygg had no competition in applying as next editor of the newspaper. I hope that Brian, "a junior in journalism and honors," is not an accurate reflection on either the UM journalism school or the honors program.

Posters, handbills not allowed on UM walls, windows or doors

By Sam Richards
Kaimin Reporter

Are you interested in putting up a poster somewhere on the University of Montana campus?

If so, you should get your poster or handbill approved by people in the building that you are posting it in.

The UM facility use policy, drawn up in September 1979, says the only postings allowed on campus are those advertising school or student-related events. Any such postings must be made either on bulletin boards or on kiosks, the small structures on campus specifically designed for posting bills.

The facility use policy also says that ads for any small business — student-affiliated or not — are illegal on campus because state facilities should not be used to compete with the private sector, unless the competitive use is "directly related to the mission of the university."

A check on residence hall bulletin boards showed that less than half of the postings were authorized by the central Residence Halls office at Turner Hall. In Aber Hall, the first floor bulletin board had 15 postings, four of which were approved with a special rubber stamp by the Residence Halls office. In Brantly Hall, 11 of 19 postings were approved.

In the University Center, less than half of all postings were approved and most of the postings were on either the north or south windows.

Susan Ashcraft, sophomore in general studies and a worker for the Women's Resource Center (WRC), said she wanted to post WRC-related handbills on the Aber and Knowles Halls' bulletin boards, but was told she would have to get the bills approved at Turner Hall.

"I didn't know about the rule until I went into the dorm and they said I couldn't put my poster up," she said. "Their intent is censorship. They're trying to control what students see."

Ron Brunell, director of residence halls, denied Ashcraft's claim and said posters have to be approved before posting to see if they meet the requirements of the facility use policy. Postings are allowed only on bulletin boards and kiosks because it "gets to be quite a mess" having posters on walls, doors and windows, Brunell said. Tape removing paint from walls and nails in walls and doors are also prime considerations, Brunell said.

It's up to residence hall head residents or custodians to take down unapproved postings, but Brunell said there are a lot of bulletin boards to monitor, and that some postings get by.

"Once I had to tell a girl scout 'no' because she wanted to sell cookies on campus," Brunell said. "I bought eight boxes of cookies after that."

Rita Hayworth as Gilda

Set in a Buenos Aires casino, Charles Vidor's Gilda (1946) features Rita Hayworth as the sex goddess incarnate — tangled hair, carmine lips, languorous poses — in a highly charged story about an emotional triangle. Glenn Ford also stars as Johnny Farrell, the new casino manager for an overwhelmingly ambitious tycoon (George Macready) who is married to Johnny's old flame, Gilda. Plot counts for relatively little in this film noir classic, but Gilda is memorable for its sexual heat, jealousy, and decadent atmosphere. Rita Hayworth's ferociously sexual dance in the nightclub, peeling off long black gloves, was every GI's dream, and her "Put the Blame on Mame" number still melts the screen. Plus, Daffy Duck in Friz Freleng's Hollywood Daffy ('46) and the News Parade of 1946!

Griz capture second in Big Sky

By Ray Murray
Kaimin Sports Editor

The Grizzlies clinched second place in the Big Sky Conference last weekend with victories over Northern Arizona, 65-52, Friday night and Nevada-Reno, 82-74, Saturday night.

Saturday night was Naseby Rhinehart night, and he received a standing ovation for his nearly 50 years of service to the University of Montana. Rhinehart has been UM's only trainer.

The wins boosted the Grizzlies' record to 10-4 in conference play and 17-9 overall.

Forward Derrick Pope led the Grizzlies in scoring both nights, tossing in 14 against Northern Arizona and 25 against Nevada-Reno.

Center Craig Larsen played two strong games, pulling down a game-high 12 rebounds and scoring 12 points against Northern Arizona, and adding 10 points and a season-high 17 points against Nevada-Reno.

The Grizzlies will face Nevada-Reno Friday night in the first round of the Big Sky playoffs in Moscow, Idaho.

Women's Basketball

The Lady Griz improved their league-leading record to 11-0 Saturday night after defeating Eastern Washington 52-50.

UM's overall record is 21-2. The Lady Griz are first in the nation for defense, limiting opponents to 51.7 points a game.

Sophomore center Doris Deden scored 15 points and grabbed nine rebounds to lead UM against EWU. Shari Thesenvitz, a sophomore forward, added eight points and eight rebounds.

Starting guards Barb Kavanagh and Cheri Bratt combined for 17 points to help give UM the edge over the Eagles.

UM will play its last conference game tomorrow at Portland State.

The Lady Griz play Oregon State Friday and the University of Oregon Saturday in two non-conference games to end regular-season play.

Women's Swimming

The women's swim team set 13 school records at the Northwest Women's College Sports Association Swimming and Diving Championships held in Seattle last weekend.

The University of Washington won the team title with 1,435 points, while UM finished seventh with 353 points.

Edie Van Buskirk paced UM setting school records in the 200-yard freestyle with 55.39, and 18:15.5 in the 1,650-yard freestyle.

Van Buskirk qualified for nationals in the 100-200 and 500-yard freestyle, while Tracy McLean qualified in the 50-yard freestyle. The 200-yard freestyle relay team of Van Buskirk, McLean, Gail Stevens and Beth Kenkelman also qualified for nationals, which will be held March 11-13 in Moscow, Idaho.

Men's Track

Jack Ramsey won the 1,500-meter run with a meet record of 3:47.04 seconds at the Big Sky Conference championships held in Pocatello, Idaho.

World News

THE WORLD

• Israeli right-wing nationalists called yesterday for a vote of no-confidence in Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government to protest the sealing off of the Sinai Desert against opponents of Israel's withdrawal. The no-confidence motion was sponsored by the three-member Tehiya Renaissance Party, which called on Begin to remove army roadblocks put up Friday night by the military and stop the pullback from the Sinai.

THE NATION

• Thousands of college students from across the nation converged on Congress yesterday to protest President Ronald Reagan's proposed deep cuts in loans, grants and other aid for their education. It was "National Student Lobby Day," and the large turnout of protestors, who are members of nine national student groups, came amid mounting signs of resistance among both Republicans and Democrats to Reagan's call for cutting education aid from $13 billion to less than $10 billion in fiscal 1983.

MONTANA

• Branch banks holding loans to debt-ridden farmers and ranchers may be pressured by their home offices into calling in the loans and thus causing further decline in prices for produce and land, says Clair Willets, head of the Great Falls Production Credit Association. Such a step would force many farmers to sell out, Willets said.

Violence may deter voters in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — With both campaign violence and the fighting between leftist guerrillas and government forces increasing, politicians predict a light vote for the March 28 election of a constituent assembly in El Salvador.

Retired Maj. Roberto D'Abuisson, the ultra-rightist party leader wounded in a guerrilla ambush Saturday, said in an interview last week he expected 700,000 voters, or 35 percent of the estimated 2 million people of voting age.

David Trejos of President Jose Napoleon Duarte's centrist Christian Democrat Party said 500,000 would be a big turnout.

Access...

Alaska Lands act applies to all national forests nationwide, not just those in Alaska.

Even before the appeal courts ruling, the U.S. Forest Service had a long-standing policy of granting non-federal landowners inside national forests necessary access through federal lands.

The National Forest System now contains about 191 million acres. Within that acreage are another 39 million acres of non-federal land, most of which is owned by private parties.

"This unwarranted extension of the access provision has severely curtailed the ability of federal agencies to manage the federal lands throughout the nation," the Montana Wilderness Association said in asking the Supreme Court to review the 9th Circuit court's ruling.

Corrections

The Montana Kaimin incorrectly reported Thursday that a two-thirds vote of the student body was needed to free money from the ASUM building fees fund to build a new building.

State Regent policy states that any request for more than $200,000 from the fund requires a survey or election to determine student opinion on the expenditure, but that the results aren't binding.

The Kaimin incorrectly reported Friday that Ravi de Silva, an unaffiliated candidate for Central Board, hoped to establish a day care facility at the University of Montana for married students. De Silva said he hoped to obtain more funding for the ASUM Day Care Center, which is already in existence.

On Friday the Kaimin also incorrectly quoted CB candidate Steve Dunfee as saying that he hoped to bring back a sense of humor to ASUM. Dunfee said he hoped to bring back a sense of honor to ASUM.

The Kaimin regrets the errors.
